

ANTI'S SEEN

Clayton's outrage led to a self-inflicted broken bottle gash that left the entire stage covered with blood. And then

"You just don't know how much fun it is to smash a guitar." Guitarist Joe Young is right.

Their goal, according to vocalist Jeff Clayton, the rowdiest of the four, is to give it their all, "open up and bleed, to hang over the edge without falling."

During one song a black liquid oozed from his mouth, puddling at his feet. His crazy eyes and neanderthal approach to dancing makes chicken head biter Ozzy Osbourne look like a clown. He'd swing his microphone, grab a cowbell from the drum kit and beat it unmercifully until the stand collapsed from the pounding. Then the two guitarists celebrated by stomping the metal fixture into twisted flatness. And there also could be the hidden key to Clayton's meaning—those band members could be risking their keen and sensitive musicians' hearing by spending an hour in the same building as AntiSeen.
